Rescue Corner

If you get a chance- be sure to "share" the rescue groups pictures on your FB wall- this helps get the dog out there- and perhaps- help them find their forever homes.

Mick Jagger. Mick is such a sweet lovable little guy, he weighs in at 56 lbs and is a smaller Boxer boy. He is a typical Boxer in every way. He gets along great with every dog and human, small or large. He knows his basic commands, will give you his undivided attention and loves belly rubs. He is a true cuddly, bundle of fun kind of a Boxer. Mick enjoys playing with toys inside or out. Mick does need a 6ft fence though as he is spring loaded and has jumping skills. Mick did make it over a small section of fence that I have that's 4' 8" in a single bound both directions! He was so happy and proud of himself and when he came back over to me I was happy and proud of him too. He is a fun and wonderful little Boxer boy that is ready for a home of his own to love on him.

Learning Stuff... Oh ya...

The 5 phases of movement

1. Reach - The front leg reaches forward as far as his angulation permits
2. Pull - The shoulder musculature pulls / transfers his weight forward
3. Transition - The middle of the stride
4. Push - The rear musculature takes over and pushes his weight forward
5. Drive - The rear leg drives through as far as his angulation permits

The Correct Boxer

Showing how the angle of the shoulder blade affects extension:

The well laid back shoulder blade gives more extension to the front leg
Note that the length of upper arm does not affect the angle of extension, only the timing

The steeper the angle of the shoulder blade the less extension of the front leg

Now when you can see the difference side by side you will discover that the first dog will need less steps and energy to cover the same distance
