Common holtering question... Answered by the fine folks at Alba!

Alba Medical

November 6, 2011

Question: If a bitch is pregnant can she still be holtered? If so does it depend how far along in her pregnancy Does being in season affect holter readings like it does echo's? We were all talking and everybody had different answers to these questions so I thought I ask.

Answered by Dr. Carl Sammarco, Veterinary Cardiologist

Pregnancy should not really increase a Boxer dog from having no VPCs to having so many that it would be a clear abnormal. Certainly, it is possible for a pregnant dog, which is in a high energy or metabolic state due to her extra work she has to do to feed the fetuses, may have a few more VPCs on a 24 hour Holter. This would normal. It should not give her 3,000 VPCs. So I do not think it is contra-indicated to a Holter in this situation, but it seems like a variable we can avoid, so to reduce any confusion in such situations, I would try at all costs to avoid doing a Holter on pregnant bitch.
